Project Delivery Methods Chapter 5

This PDM outlines six variations of project delivery. Each has its own procurement process and contractual arrangement summarized below and then further described in Chapter 7 and Chapter 8, respectively. The delivery method utilized will affect the relationships of all stakeholders and participants, particularly how a project is designed, procured, and constructed.

The method through which a project is delivered is dependent on three major considerations: scope, budget and schedule.

The scope of a project is defined by its magnitude, form, function and complexity. As the owner, Cleveland Metroparks is responsible for ensuring the goals, objectives and priorities are accomplished for all of the Park District's capital projects, particularly when working with external consultants and contractors.

The time necessary and allotted for the completion of a project is another important consideration when determining the best project delivery method. The sequencing of project activities and the scheduling of those activities will illustrate the relationship of the design and construction phases, as well as decision points for a project. Once the relationship balance is understood, a clearer picture of the type of delivery method to use will emerge.

The budget is also to be considered. Each delivery method has benefits and limitations on the overall cost of a project. Understanding scope and schedule will help determine the value or premium that the budget can withstand.

While there are six project delivery methods identified in the PDM, the reality is that there are many variations of these methods and each project will have its own unique path to completion. No matter the method chosen, a smooth process and successful project depends heavily on those managing the design, procurement and construction activities.
